To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing regarding an extremely troubling, and most likely, illegal, experience that I just had when trying to make a reservation on the usairways.com website. I had booked four tickets for my family to travel roundtrip from Boston to Philadelphia from May 2, 2014 to May 7, 2014. Those tickets were booked on March 20, 2014 under confirmation number G7TPXK and totaled $952.00. On April 3, 2014, I realized that I needed to change my outgoing flight only so that I could arrive in Philadelphia earlier. I called the reservations number and spoke with a representative. She told me that if I were to cancel my outgoing flight, but wanted to keep my return flight with my family, she would need to "reissue" my return flight and I would be subject to a $200 change fee. Thus, I would lose the money I spent on my outgoing ticket, would have to pay to buy a new outgoing ticket, and would be charged $200 simply to keep the return flight, which I had already paid for. This was distressing, but I decided to cancel my entire ticket and completely re-book because, according to the website, each flight was now only $55. If I cancelled my whole ticket, I would only have to pay $110 extra, as opposed to the $200 change fee plus the $55 cost of a new outgoing ticket.

I called back to speak to a reservation agent and I cancelled my whole ticket. That agent informed me that I could use the price of the cancelled ticket, $238, toward the price of a new ticket, but that it would be subject to a $200 change fee. In other words, I had $38 to use toward a new ticket. That agent explained to me that I could log in to usairways.com with my Dividend Miles account and "change" the ticket in order to use the $38. (Incidentally, I have a previous $34 credit from a similar situation, but I was informed that these credits could not be combined). I did as the agent instructed and searched for the same Boston to Philadelphia flights while "logged in" under my Dividend Miles account. Shockingly, the prices for the exact same tickets described above were drastically higher when I identified myself by "logging in." Instead of $55 each way, the outgoing flight was $161 and the return flight was $119. These flights totaled $280 and I was expected to pay that minus the $38, which was $243. I immediately "logged out" and searched again. When I did not identify myself to the website, the prices for the exact same flights were once again $55 each.

I have enclosed dated print-outs of the search results for these flights as proof of this corrupt practice. You can see that when I am "logged in" as myself (the only way I can use the $38 credit), the price for these round-trip flights is $133 more than when I search anonymously at the exact same time and date. Thus, U.S. Airways is effectively prohibiting customers from using any of the residual funds from cancelled flights. To prove this, I also took a picture of my computer screen with both windows open simultaneously – the one where I am anonymously searching quoting me the $55 price, and the other, where I am attempting to "change" my ticket to use the residual funds, quoting me the much higher prices. I am an attorney, but I do not specialize in this type of law. It is apparent that this may be grounds for a class-action law suit, as this is clearly a deceptive business practice, and I will be sending this information to an attorney who is more knowledgeable in this area. I also plan on disseminating this information on social media websites to alert the public and determine if others have had a similar experience.

It probably goes without saying that anytime I have a choice in the future I will not be flying U.S. Airways.

Sincerely,

A handwritten signature in dark ink, appearing to read 'Charlotte Whitmore', with a long, sweeping horizontal stroke extending to the right.

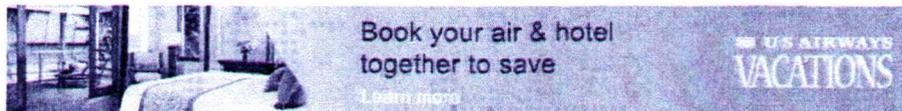

Charlotte Whitmore
